

Published on OpenChannels (<https://www.openchannels.org>)

From the Archives: Ecological grief: New research on the mental health consequences of working in marine conservation and management in a time of rapid global change (MEAM Feb-Mar 2020, Issue 13:4)

Editor's Note: From the Archives calls attention to past Skimmer/MEAM articles whose perspectives and insight remain relevant.

As professionals in the marine conservation and management field, Skimmer readers are hyperaware of large scale and global changes to marine ecosystems. Research is now examining the emotional and psychological toll that these changes are having on people. This article synthesizes the seminal research on "ecological grief" and how society can address it at both policy and personal levels.

Source URL: <https://www.openchannels.org/news/skimmer-marine-ecosystems-and-management/archives-ecological-grief-new-research-mental-health>